Comments:

Before California builds any new dams or canals, we must conserve the fresh water we're already using. In particular, agribusiness in the Central Valley (which uses 85% of California's channelled fresh water) should conserve its water by growing more drought-resistant crops and irrigating at night using water-saving irrigation techniques. Aggressive water conservation for agriculture should come before new diversion projects. The Bay needs all the fresh water it can get. Thank you.
